

Aram Conference: The Amorites 07-09 July 2011

Aram Society for Syro-Mesopotamian Studies is inaugurating a series of conferences on the Amorites and related themes. These will be held every four years at the University of Oxford. The first in the series will take place in 2011 and it aims to study the Amorites' kingdoms and their civilization in the Syro-Mesopotamian area.

Scholars are invited to submit papers in one of two categories:

1. Academic research in a paper allotted 40 minutes including discussion.
2. Short academic interventions presenting work in progress or brief notes on the subject lasting 25 minutes including discussion.

Aram Society will form a scientific advisory committee to help with the organization of the conference and the editing of conference proceedings for publication. We will confirm that we have received your proposal on receipt of an abstract that should include the main sources consulted for the paper and the time needed to deliver the communication. In order to allow for discussion participants should speak for 35 or 20 minutes.

Papers will be accepted from accredited academics in the field and please note that the committee will be very strict in only accepting papers relevant to the conference theme. Finally the organizing committee reserves the right to reduce the length of a paper if necessary and all papers submitted for publication are accepted subject to peer review.
