

The Levantine Ceramic Project – 2014 Mini-Workshop 1
Israel, the Palestinian Territories, and southern Lebanon
AIAR, Jerusalem – Monday, March 10th, 2014

The Levantine Ceramics Project (LCP) invites you to a day-long workshop at the Albright Institute of Archaeological Research, Jerusalem. Presentations will focus on description and analysis of ceramic wares of all eras from excavations in Israel, the Palestinian Territories, and southern Lebanon. Each session will include substantial time for group discussion, with the goal of achieving a better understanding of ceramic wares and fabrics across periods.

One of the primary goals of this workshop is to introduce the LCP, a new tool for archaeological research. The LCP has two components: periodic workshops and a public, participatory website (www.levantineceramics.org). The website is a searchable repository for information, both new and already published, on ceramic wares, shapes, specific vessels, contexts, analyses, kiln sites, and chronology. It is designed to link information and enable a wide array of search possibilities. The goal of the LCP is to expand access to ceramic data, to foster open, collaborative research, and to connect scholars to scholarship.

RSVP by February 17th to albrightprogramcoordinator@gmail.com

Due to limited space, only the first 30 respondents will be confirmed on a first come, first served basis. Later respondents will be put on a waiting list.
